In this context distance education includes online and/or hybrid courses utilizing the Internet and possibly other technologies such as CD-Rom, video, audio, and interactive exercises.

With our expanding and diverse student population within Glendale Community College and the surrounding communities, it is imperative that GCC offer students options. There are so many, that because of countless reasons, are not able to attend a live classroom setting during the week. However, these students still desire to learn and accomplish personal and academic growth. With this rudimentary reading classes being offered via an online delivery system, such as WebCT, those that are unable to make it in person can now take advantage of improving their academic reading level from the comfort of their own homes. Distance education is the wave of the future for all educational institutions, not just community colleges, and present and future students are seeking options in order to have it all...family, career and academic and personal growth.

With a course designed for distance education, the instructor needs to make provisions to accommodate disabled students in a comparable manner to traditional courses, such as ensuring that websites are accessible to screen readers for the visually impaired.*
