

A GATHERING TO EXPLORE HOW DO WE THINK AND TALK ABOUT INDIGENOUS AMERICANS

PRESENTER:

Professor Roger Bowerman

Professor of Ethnic Studies and History

Over 200 tribes lived rich and complex lives in North America before the European invasions of the 16th and 17th centuries. Why, then, are the original inhabitants typically appear as only a footnote in United States history? The tragedy of the Trail of Tears is sometimes mentioned, but the story – as is typical – focuses on the actions of the aggressor, not the response of the oppressed.

This is the eternal question in Native American studies: how to place indigenous peoples at the center of their own experience.

So, join this gathering moderated Roger Bowerman, and let's share ideas, questions, goals and understandings regarding the experience of the First People.
