Dan Duffy brings over thirty years of transformative information technology leadership focused primarily on higher education. In addition to administrative leadership roles, Dan also served as a full-time and adjunct faculty member at the undergraduate and graduate program levels.

Throughout his career, Dan has been dedicated to implementing strategic changes that support student success, optimize operations, and align people, processes, and technology. Known for his innovative, customer-focused approach and consistently delivering results focused on institutional excellence, Dan brings a diverse background spanning various educational institutions and higher education consulting firms. Having served in key leadership positions such as Chief Information Officer (CIO) and Vice President for Information Resources, Dan has led smart classroom transformations, IT strategic planning, student retention efforts, IT governance, and service delivery for renowned institutions, including Fresno Pacific University, Seattle University, Southern Alberta Institute of Technology, University of the Incarnate Word, University of Washington, Walla Walla Community College, Yosemite Community College District, and others.

A first-generation college student, Dan's educational journey includes completing coursework in the Doctor of Education (EdD) in Educational Leadership from Seattle University, complemented by a Master in Business Administration (MBA) in Computer Information Systems from Suffolk University. He is a visionary leader and a skilled communicator, passionate about leveraging technology to remove barriers to access, enhance learning outcomes, improve the student experience, and drive institutional success.

A Boston native, Dan is a lifelong sports fan. Dan and his wife Maryam live in Seattle where they enjoy traveling, hiking, family, and friends.
